Flour City in Panic ---Big Part of the Business Section in Ruins.

ROCHESTER, N. Y., April 13.—A conflagration that is sweeping the East Main street business section of this city is beyond control. The department is powerless, as a high wind is driving the flames. Already several million dollars' worth of property has been destroyed.

The militia has been called out to protect property and control the panic-stricken people.

All available help from neighboring cities and towns has been summoned.

The fire started about a mile from the center of the city. The wind swept the flames up the street, and at noon a large section of the thoroughfare was ablaze.

St. Peter's Church was burning, as well as many business buildings.

Seething Mass of Flame.

The blaze originated in the house of James C. O'Connell, a grocer, who was sleeping in the building. The fire spread rapidly, and in a few minutes the entire block was in flames.

At that time the fire was working westward toward the city hall, and eastward toward St. Peter's Church. The fire spread rapidly, and in a few minutes the entire block was in flames.

Jewish Temple Destroyed.

The Common Sense of an American Merchant Marine

We Are Losing Our Foreign Trade
Because We Haven't Ships to Carry Our Cargoes

Copyright, 1909, by American Journal Company

When the accurate history of our economic policies is read in the next quarter century, intelligent business men of America will regard with amazement the dullness of our practical statesmen to see, and their slowness to develop, the benefits of an American merchant marine.

This newspaper has sought continually to impress upon successive Congresses and the people the necessity and the wisdom of this practical view.

A few days since Representative Duncan McKinley of California, in discussing the Payne tariff bill, presented some vigorous reflections and some startling statistics to further emphasize the ever-increasing necessity of the merchant marine.

By the record it appears that the astute and watchful kingdom of Japan is developing her ship power in advance of her industry, and has at the present time more ships than cargoes—a vital inspiration to Japan's commerce not only to develop additional industries, but to go out eagerly after more trade to fill her waiting ships at the expense of our own and other nations.

On the other hand, it is startling to be told that America is developing industries so much faster than commerce, CARGOES SO MUCH MORE RAPIDLY THAN SHIPS to haul them—that we have already exceeded the demand of our own people, and if we do not develop through a merchant marine the new markets for our surplus products, that fact will actually necessitate the shutting down of many of our mills and factories and the throwing of millions of workmen out of employment.

Consider these figures: In 1900 the total population of the country was 76,303,387. In 1905 the population was 83,143,000. Which means that between 1900 and 1905 our population increased about six and one-half million souls.

But in our industrial development the value of our products in 1900 was $9,878,825,200, while last year, according to Congressman McKinley, the value of these products had advanced to about fifteen and a half billions, or a solid increase of MORE THAN SEVEN THOUSAND MILLION DOLLARS!

We have developed as a nation the most stupendous industrial system on the earth. This enormous sum total furnishes employment for over 7,000,000 workers. And more than 30,000,000 souls depend for subsistence upon the wage-earners of the country.

To lose out on this magnificent development through the narrowness and prejudice of our lawmakers is a folly that cannot be forgiven or forgotten by workmen or by manufacturers.

And we ARE losing out in many directions. Up to a few months ago the United States controlled a trade with Australia which amounted to a little over $30,000,000 a year, carried by the Oceanic line of steamships from San Francisco. The Oceanic line of steamships has been recently discontinued by the parsimony of our enormously rich government, and we are losing our trade with Australia with such rapidity that in a short time OUR MANUFACTURED PRODUCTS WILL NOT BE KNOWN IN AUSTRALIAN MARKETS.

We have even reached such a level of commercial humility that our Western business men are hoping that Japan will use some of her surplus ships to re-establish between San Francisco and Australia the line of merchant marine that we have abandoned.

Of all parts of the world our country now should be reaching out to have and to hold the commercial trade of South America. It is naturally our territory—nearest and most neighborly. And yet among the thousands of ships which every month go into South American ports, East and West, not one, or scarcely one, flies the American flag, and the comparatively few products which we send to South America go in foreign bottoms, to create among these people whom we are so ambitious to impress the idea that America without a merchant marine is not a commercial nation and not to be compared with England or Germany or Japan as commercial friends and reciprocal traders.

We are losing now in South America the golden interchanges which it will be a colossal undertaking to recover in the future.

Why are we spending from three to four hundred millions to build the Panama Canal? What is the grand object in view if it is not to open the world markets to our products and our ships?

And yet, under the narrow parsimony of our present policies, the Panama Canal, when complete, may be celebrated as a grand opening of this great commercial channel to the enterprise, the liberality and the commercial courage of WISER NATIONS, which are ready and waiting to send their crowding ships, floating their national flag, through our own great canal, to continue their triumphs over our commerce in the two imperial oceans of the world.

How can men credited by their constituents with the intelligence to hold a seat in Congress forfeit this popular confidence by failing or refusing to see the indispensable public necessity of an American merchant marine?

LETTERS FROM AMERICAN READERS

THE LIQUOR QUESTION
Editor BOSTON AMERICAN:
Mr. Fox is quoted as saying at the Free Trade Club dinner that last volume on duties had legislation, I differ from the speaker. Bad saloons are due solely to lack of police. They foster and encourage them and make them profitable. Many such saloons are the harbors of refuge for thieves and burglars.

Apart from this side of the question, the adulteration of liquor by inexperienced dealers is largely responsible for the crime committed "while under the influence of drink." I am told that pure liquor now days is a rarity and that pernicious stuff under the name of whiskey is sold in most of the severely settled places in the land.

We are informed by the liquor interest that every election day of the country knows some amount of money paid in taxes by the brewers and distillers that would not be paid if the people voted "no license." I have before me the April number of the World, politics and barrel house, and in it we read that since the saloons in Kansas City, Mo., were closed in June, 1906, that they have as an increase of $1,000,000 in bank deposits; an increase of 11,000 in population; a decrease in the public debt; and a decline in the number of homicides.

There is food for sobering here.
